Q: grep command when the file is in a directory I'm trying to grep the content of the file "feof.txt" located in the directory "files", the problem is that the file feof.txt has a special character.

Files |-----files | |-----feof.txt
|-----main | |-----scan | | |-----x.sh |
|-----beep.sh | |-----cmd.sh | |-----feof.txt
|-----run |-----cmd.sh

So when I try to do : cat /feof.txt | grep "1a" I get the following error message:
awk: cmd.sh:1: 1a Invalid char in expression A: The issue is not related to your shell but to your cat command. cat /feof.txt This line says that cat should read /feof.txt (where is a regular file) and then give that text to grep. But it doesn't. /feof.txt This is just a file path without any special meaning. And since it doesn't contain a filename, cat can't do anything with it. You can't cat a file unless you specify the filename and/or the file is in the current directory. You can use /feof 4bc0debe42
